Director Note

Mother Prays All Day Long was an attempt for us to make an unconventional, feminist statement about migrant women's lives in a non-heteronormative context. It questions the rules and laws in the German system and their effects on migrant women's inner life. How real can be a fake marriage? Can marriage ever be real or is it just an agreement, a contract that always remains fake? How do the rules and laws in the heteronormative western system empower white supremacy? How complex can become the hierarchy in a relationship between a German and a foreigner when the permission of the foreigner to stay in the country depends on the German one's decision? The intersection between race, gender, and sexual orientation can bring us to a more complex perspective on the expectations of modern western society around feminine bodies and motherhood.

Producer Note

Hoda Taheri explores the position of women, motherhood, and family in today's western, as well as non-western, cultures. Mother Prays All Day Long is a film constantly pushing and blurring the border between the fiction and autobiographical aspects of the story. Direct in her message, bold in her performance, minimalistic in the setup, Hoda Taheri is finding all the beauty within her vulnerability, giving her own experiences of trauma its own poetics.
